

The International Union of Immunological Societies (IUIS) conference 2025 was great!

As a final year PhD student who wants to continue doing a postdoc, I wanted to attend a big conference where I could meet many group leaders and make connections for my future. I talked privately with some group leaders and I also talked with postdocs working in places where I would like to go in the future, which was really useful as I asked them not only about the science but also about the lab and the working environment.

I had the pleasure of listening to Jim Allison (Nobel Prize winner) and very renowned scientists (Caetano Reis e Sousa, Miriam Merad, Arlene Sharpe, Gabriel Rabinovich, and the list continues...) from all around the world, which is truly inspiring.

Although it was a huge conference, I presented a poster and many people came to have very nice talks about my work, with useful insights and ideas.

Overall, I really enjoyed the conference and it was truly useful for my future decisions and perspectives.

Thanks to the NVVI for supporting my participation!
